Light sensors are an important technical component in modern hand-crank generators, especially in outdoor or emergencies. Here are the main roles of light sensors in hand-cranked generators: light sensors automatically adjust the brightness of the LED illumination according to the ambient light level to save power and prolong the usage time.

How does a hand crank generator work?

It generates electricity by cranking a handle with human power to rotate a coil inside the generator in a magnetic field. The average power of a human being is 0.1 to 0.2 horsepower, which is about 73 to 150 watts of power, which is not enough to last for a long time. Therefore a hand crank generator will not produce more than 100 watts.
