Plus, a 70-hour power reserve is quite useful. When it comes to pricing, the steel version will cost EUR31,100. The gold model is priced at EUR44,500, and the diamond-set model is EUR52,500. That's not insignificant money, but compared to examples from Lange, Vacheron, or Patek, the Jaeger-LeCoultre is a relative bargain.

Why did Jaeger-LeCoultre create a Powermatic watch?

Positioned at 12 o'clock a rotating disk displayed the remaining hours of power reserve and defined a new collection for Jaeger-LeCoultre, the Powermatic. Because an automatic watch winds infinitely this was the first time people could know about the remaining power left in the mainspring .

Where is Jaeger-LeCoultre made?

Jaeger-LeCoultre's in-house calibre 939, visible through the sapphire caseback, is manufactured, assembled and decorated in the brand's manufacture in Le Sentier. This automatic base movement, which powers the Geographic module on top, has 295 components, beats at 28,800vph and delivers a 70-hour power reserve.

Is Jaeger-LeCoultre's Reverso a sports watch?

Fair enough, the Reverso was initially designed for polo players, but by today's standards, it is far closer to being a dress watch than a sports watch. To amend this situation, Jaeger-LeCoultre turned to its Memovox Polaris, an iconic dive watch of 1968 with an underwater alarm, and used it as inspiration for its sporty Polaris collection of 2018.
